SATURDAY, : : SEPTEMBER 4, 1852.

Gen. Scott's Right Arm in Danger.—Senator Wade wrote to Tilden, of Ohio, that he had had a conversation with General Scott, and that the latter had said he would cut off his right arm rather than lend it to the support of slavery. Tilden not only reported this about amongst the free-sellers, but he read it, or pretended to read it, where some democrat heard it and published it. There is no doubt about the facts so far. But Tilden has denied that Scott ever used that language to him. He has written at least two letters about it. One is very explicit in his denial, and don't admit that he wrote any letter at all to Tilden: but the other says he has not the letter at hand, but the quotation from it is inaccurate. Perhaps Scott didn't say he would cut off his right arm, or suffer it to be cut off, &c.; but if he did not, there's a lie out between Wade and Tilden. One or the other must father it. They are both good abolitionists, and have been rather indiscreet. We don't see, however, why the white South should make such a fuss about this. There is a great deal of intrinsic probability about it. Scott is much excited these times, and has to bob and dodge about very indignantly. He has enough to puzzle a man with resolutions “annexed.” No wonder if he should make hasty declarations, like hasty plates of soup. His arm is perfectly safe, in any event; no danger of losing it. He said, on Sunday last, that he approved the whig platform, and he would say so yet. He has not said so, and he is not dead yet. It's the fashion of whigs to get excited and make rash pledges about what they will do. They will head somebody or die, or they will succor or climb a pole a hundred feet high ‘tother and foremost, and all that sort of stuff. It's just like white pledges, this rash remark of Scott's, if he ever made it. The whigs need not be uneasy. Scott will not throw away his right arm if it does support slavery, any more than General Combs will climb that pole.

In the meantime, the story lies between Wade and Tilden. It is charged publicly that Tilden telegraphed to Tilden to burn the letters, and that Tilden did as requested, but took the precaution to hide the handwriting first identified as well as the language, by good witness; so this lie will come home to roost one of these days.

It is altogether a whig affair, let them settle it. If it's of no consequence whether Scott made the remark or not, he never meant to stick to it. If it's unprofitable, he will take it back, as he did his nativism of 1844, and his democracy of 1859.

Whig editors are very much concerned about John Van Buren's supporting Pierce. John has done what the whig candidate has not done; he has approved the platform on the slavery question. He has so declared explicitly. We published his remarks, and the editor of the Journal has had an opportunity to read them. The most national of Scott's supporters are not more explicitly for supporting the compromise than John Van Buren.

Not only so; three-fourths of the barn-burners are of the same opinion on that subject that Van Buren is. They may allege that Van Buren is inconsistent. They can settle that amongst themselves. John Van Buren has as much right to be inconsistent as Daniel Webster, or Millard Fillmore has.

We don't wonder that the whigs feel badly about the course pursued by the Van Buren party. It auger ill for them. Instead of confessing the fact that the Van Buren men have changed, they want to make out that the democratic party have changed; that the mountain went to Mahomet; that Mahomet didn't go to the mountain.

The editor of the Democrat quotes a sentence or two from the Hon. B. F. Butler's letter to Mr. Chase. Will he copy that portion of Mr. B.'s letter in which the writer declares that he deserves the support of Gen. Pierce by the freewillers the best means of accomplishing what you require unaccomplished of the abolition platform?

—Lov. Journal.

After publishing Butler's public confession that Pierce was not with him or his friends on the slavery question, his reasons for supporting the democratic ticket are quite important. B. F. Butler acquiesces because he can't do anything else. When it rains, let it rain; it's perhaps as well, is a general conclusion, however much one is opposed to rain. The Buffalo platform contained the democratic creed, except the slavery question; and Butler is moderate enough to think there are some other things beside slavery, that are to be considered; and if he can't have one plank of his platform, he will take what he can get.

Gen. Scott said in his letter of 1841 to Mr. Atkinson: “I am persuaded that it is a high moral obligation of masters and slaveholding States to co-operate with each other in the safety of both colors, to ameliorate slavery, even to its extirpation.”—Lov. Journal.

Well, if he did say that, what do you get into a passion for when it is asserted that he said he would suffer his right arm to be cut off rather than lend it to the support of slavery? It's the high moral obligation of masters to ameliorate slavery “even to extirpation,” in Gen Scott's opinion, ought he not to lose both arms, both legs, and his head too, before he would support it?

If the editor of the Republic, at Washington, perseveres and don't faint, he will prove that New Hampshire is a free State, and that the democrats there are opposed to slavery—actually think it an evil, which they have not, and don't want. We think the editor will succeed in making out these points; and when he does, we shall give due notice. When a whig editor proves anything, he ought to have credit for it, he seldom performs an exploit of the kind.

John Van Buren was more petted, flattered and caressed than any other man that attended the late New Hampshire celebration of General Pierce's birth day.—Lov. Journal.

Certainly; and it was all right too. There is more joy in heaven over sinner than repenteth, than over ninety and nine just persons that need悔改.

The whigs publish Lord Wellington's comments to Scott, and also Black Hawk's good opinion of him: how about the opinion of Louis
Napoleon and Gallinipper the first?

We suggest that the whigs call another national convention and determine which of the three, Webster, Scott, or Hale, shall be the whig candidate. Scott has been long enough to show that he only distracts the whig party. Perhaps it would be better to drop the whole of them and take up some other man.

The Georgia Federal Union says that out of the ninety-five thousand voters in Georgia, at least sixty thousand are favorable to the election of Pierce and King over Scott and Graham.

The Cincinnati Sun learns that Mrs. Dinneford, the wife of Wm. Dineford, the well known actor, and once manager of the Bowery theatre, N. York, who died last year at Panama, has married a hotel keeper at that place. The said hotel keeper is reported to be a man of great wealth, but he has got a woolly head, and is as black as the ace of spades.

To the Editors of the Boston Post.
GEO. A. CORINE, U. S. Consul to Panama, is at present in Cincinnati, and will remain until he leaves for New York and Washington. He states that the climate is very healthy at Panama, and that the tide on the Pacific side of the Isthmus rises 27 feet, and on the Atlantic side it only rises 18 inches.

Watering places collect curious characters and curious characters make curious speeches. The following is a specimen:

“Mr. Mantaining do you know?” “Aw! no man I seldom hain't—prefer to walk—perhaps, some day, if I should have the misfortune to lose my leg, I would wincocle myself to keep the west of me lote.”

Monument to General Stark of Bennington—Letter of general Stark of Bennington.

The following letter from Franklin Pierce, to a committee authorized to take steps for erecting a monument to the memory of Gen. Stark, will be read with interest. The writer, says the Pittsburgh Post, seems to have been thoroughly imbued with the spirit that animated the spirits of the revolution. Eloquent and felicitous as are most of the forensic and written productions of Gen. Pierce, we cannot but express the opinion that this is not exceeded by any one of his own.
